Microbiology For The Hospital Environment:

Microbiology for the Hospital Environment Lois M. Bergquist, 1981-01-01      Microbiomes of the Built Environment National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, National Academy of Engineering, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Health and Medicine Division, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Board on Infrastructure and the Constructed Environment, Board on Environmental Studies and Toxicology, Board on Life Sciences, Committee on Microbiomes of the Built Environment: From Research to Application, 2017-10-06

People's desire to understand the environments in which they live is a natural one. People spend most of their time in spaces and structures designed, built, and managed by humans, and it is estimated that people in developed countries now spend 90 percent of their lives indoors. As people move from homes to workplaces, traveling in cars and on transit systems, microorganisms are continually with and around them. The human-associated microbes that are shed along with the human behaviors that affect their transport and removal make significant contributions to the diversity of the indoor microbiome. The characteristics of healthy indoor environments cannot yet be defined, nor do microbial clinical and building researchers yet understand how to modify features of indoor environments such as building ventilation systems and the chemistry of building materials in ways that would have predictable impacts on microbial communities to promote health and prevent disease. The factors that affect the environments within buildings, the ways in which building characteristics influence the composition and function of indoor microbial communities, and the ways in which these microbial communities relate to human health and well-being are extraordinarily complex and can be explored only as a dynamic interconnected ecosystem by engaging the fields of microbial biology and ecology, chemistry, building science, and human physiology. This report reviews what is known about the intersection of these disciplines and how new tools may facilitate advances in understanding the ecosystem of built environments, indoor microbiomes, and effects on human health and well-being. It offers a research agenda to generate the information needed so that stakeholders with an interest in understanding the impacts of built environments will be able to make more informed decisions.

Improving Sustainability During Hospital Design and Operation Stefano Capolongo, Marta Carla Bottero, Maddalena Buffoli, Emanuele Lettieri, 2015-02-25 This book describes the Sustainable High Quality Healthcare SustHealth project which had the goal of developing an original multidisciplinary evaluation tool that can be applied to assess and improve hospitals overall sustainability The comprehensive nature of the appraisal offered by this tool exceeds the scope of most current rating systems which typically permit a thorough evaluation of relevant environmental factors when designing a new building but fail to consider social and economic impacts of the design phase or the performance of the hospital's operational structure in these fields The multidisciplinary evaluation system was developed from its very inception through to its testing by following a scientific experimental method in which a global perspective was constantly maintained as opposed to a focus only on specific technical issues Application of the SustHealth rating tool to a currently functioning hospital or one under design will identify weaknesses and guide users to potential low cost short term solutions and longer term strategies for improvement
