vast majority of movement in Europe takes place on the road Travelers use the car to explore parts of the continent on their holidays and goods travel large distances to reach consumers Indeed the twentieth century has deservedly been characterized as the century of the car The situation looked very different around 1900 People crossing national borders by car encountered multiple hurdles on their way Technically they imported their vehicle into a neighboring country and had to pay astronomical import duties Often they needed to pass a driving test in each country they visited Early on automobile and touring clubs sought to make life easier for traveling motorists International negotiations tackled the problems arising from differing regulations The resulting volume describes everything from the standardized traffic signs that saved human lives on the road to the Europe bus taking tourists from Stockholm to Rome in the 1950s Driving Europe offers a highly original portrait of a Europe built on roads in the course of the twentieth century

Selling Weimar Elisabeth Piller, 2020-12-17 In the decade after World War I German American relations improved swiftly While resentment and bitterness ran high on both sides in 1919 Weimar Germany and the United States managed to forge a strong transatlantic partnership by 1929 But how did Weimar Germany overcome its post war isolation so rapidly How did it regain the trust of its former adversary And how did it secure U.S. support for the revision of the Versailles Treaty Elisabeth Piller winner of the Franz Steiner Preis für Transatlantische Geschichte 2019 explores these questions not from an economic but from a cultural perspective Based on extensive archival research her ground breaking work illustrates how German state and non state actors drew heavily on cultural ties with German Americans U.S. universities and American tourists to rewin American trust and even affection at a time when traditional foreign policy tools had failed to achieve similar successes Contrary to common assumptions Weimar Germany was never incapable of selling itself abroad In fact it pursued an innovative public diplomacy campaign to not only normalize relations with the powerful United States but to build a politically advantageous transatlantic friendship
