Michaels, 2010-09-23 This new commentary part of Eerdmans's acclaimed NICNT series gives primary attention to John's gospel in its present form rather than the sources or traditions behind it J Ramsey Michaels assumes that the John who authored the book is someone very close to Jesus and therefore that the gospel is a testimony to events that actually happened in the life of Jesus Yet Michaels does not ignore the literary character of the gospel of John or its theological contribution to the larger Christian community from its own time to the present day Through a detailed verse by verse commentary Michaels reveals how the gospel of the disciple whom Jesus loved is a unified composition intertwined with the synoptics yet drawing on material none of them cover What Believers Don't Have to Believe Craig Payne, 2006 Many books set out the basic doctrines of the Christian faith the teachings regarded as essential to orthodox Christianity However can one be a faithful biblical Christian and completely disagree with the doctrines that other biblical Christians regard as crucial How much is one required to believe to maintain Christian orthodoxy and how much is one not required to believe Christians often seem to use various doctrines as litmus tests to gauge the maturity and spirituality of fellow Christians In What Believers Don't Have to Believe author Craig Payne uses evidence from the Creeds Christian history the scriptures and philosophy to argue for the invalidity of these litmus tests In particular this book focuses on five areas of disagreement creation biblical inerrancy human nature Christian political involvement and eschatology In each of these areas there are equally biblical logical and faithful interpretive stances What Believers Don't Have to Believe ultimately argues that these disagreements are non essential and unnecessary and should be set aside in favor of confessional unity The Parallel
