Whether it is in the text or the illustration, existing children's literature tends to feature elite children and their life-worlds. These books throw open the doors of that shuttered house to let in lively children of different classes, castes, religious cultures, and physical abilities. They bring altogether new stories to the world of children's literature and fill it with new sights, smells, sounds, locations, joys and sorrows. Different Tales is an original contribution to a more inclusive India.

Different Tales unearths stories from regional languages: stories that talk about the life-worlds of children in communities that one rarely reads about in children's books. Many of the stories draw on the writers' own childhoods to depict different ways of growing up in an often hostile world, finding new relationships with peers, parents and other adults. They take us on enticing journeys as they speak of delicious cuisines, ingenious little games, unexpected lessons at school and heartwarming friendships.
