

THE PARTICIPANT SELF

by ADRIAN VAN KAAM • BERT VAN CROONENBURG • SUSAN MUTO

In two exquisitely designed and written volumes, the authors of The Emergent Self have combined their deep personal interests in man and their profound psychological insight to explore one of the most fundamental rhythms of his life, that of participation and recollection. This is the rhythm of being intimately involved in the communal dimension of experience and yet of being able to dwell in recollected presence on the meaning of that experience.

This book is written in answer to questions posed about the primary modes of human participation and recollection. Each two consecutive chapters reflect on complementary aspects of this central theme. For example, the first two chapters of Book I, entitled Participation, consider communion and its complement retreat.

The call to retreat reminds me to return to myself and reconfirm my personal dignity while the call to communion reawakens my need to be respected and affirmed by others. Likewise, in complementary chapters on work and play, it becomes clear that the I who laughs and loves and plays should be the I who works, for the productive I and the creative I are conjoined in every original human endeavor. Each pair of chapters thus seeks to unify the apparent polarities of human experience into the harmonious whole my life is always striving to become.

The underlying motif of participation and recollection continues to guide the authors in questions posed about the participant self in Book II, Recollection: What is typical of true human interest? What part does detachment play in our growth toward personal maturity? By what signs do we recognize a truly giving self? and How can I foster my receptive mode of presence, are only some of the questions which invite an ever-deepening reflection on my manifold moments of aloneness and togetherness.
