Reproduction and Immune Homeostasis in a Long-lived Seabird, the Nazca Booby (Sula Granti) Victor Apanius, Mark A. Westbrock, David J. Anderson, 2008 Cladistics and the Origin of Birds Frances C. James, John A. Pourtless, 2010-07-14

On the Origin of Species Through Heteropatric Differentiation Kevin Winker, 2010-11

Differentiation and speciation without extended isolation appear to be common among migratory animals. Historical oversight of this is probably due to temporal distortion in distribution maps and a tendency to consider that lineages had different historical traits such as being sedentary or much less mobile. Mobility among cyclic migrants makes population isolation difficult and diminished levels of intraspecific differentiation occur in avian migrants. I term this Montgomery's rule. Nevertheless many lineages have differentiated despite increased mobility and a high propensity for gene flow. Conditions that speciation theory has not addressed adequately. Populations of seasonal migrants usually occur in allopatry and sympatry during a migratory cycle and this distributional pattern heteropatry is the focus of a model empirically developed to explain differentiation in migratory lineages. Divergence arises through disruptive selection from resource competition and heterogeneously distributed cyclic resources. Heteropatric speciation is a type of ecological speciation in which reproductive isolation increases between populations as a byproduct of adaptation to different environments that enhances breeding allopatry and allochrony despite degrees of sympatry that occur during the nonbreeding period in migration cycles. Mating or pair bonding in nonbreeding areas is rare. Patterns such as leapfrog migration and limited morphological divergence suggest that differentiation is driven by these ecological factors rather than by sexual selection or nontemporal changes in the resource base itself although the additional presence of either of the latter would have additive divergent effects. Migratory lineages provide a largely neglected series of natural experiments in speciation in which to test predictions stemming from this model and others focusing on ecological speciation.

The Davis Collection of Ornithological and Other Natural History Documents at the Cornell Laboratory of Ornithology Cornell University. Laboratory of Ornithology, 2005 Thomas R. Howell's Check-list of the Birds of Nicaragua as of 1993 Thomas R. Howell, 2010-10-10

Between December 1951 and April 1967 Thomas R. Howell made 13 separate research trips to Nicaragua. The result was a collection of over 2 000 bird skins and at least 16 publications that form the backbone of Nicaraguan ornithology. In the late 1970s Howell began working on a manuscript that was intended to be his major contribution to the ornithology of the country. The first version of this Check list of the Birds of Nicaragua was not ready until 1983 and many different typewritten versions circulated among a small but growing number of Nicaraguan biologists for the next two decades. Partly because of Howell's passion for detail and completeness and finally because of his failing health in the late 1990s the check list was never published before his death in December 2004. This monograph remedies what had become a significant obstacle to further studies in the country by providing in Howell's own words a comprehensive background for subsequent explorations. It documents the 654 species 611 supported with specimen evidence known to have occurred in Nicaragua as of 1993 the date of the last substantial revision of the manuscript and also provides a rationale for anticipating another 44 species The publication of this significant chapter in the history of Central American bird studies is offered both as a tribute to Tom Howell s enthusiasm and contributions and as a frame of reference and springboard for current and future ornithologists inspired to study the rich and still largely unexplored avifauna of Nicaragua Écoscience ,1994 Mémoires de la Société Royale Du Canada Royal Society of Canada,1993 The Evolution of Sibling Rivalry Douglas W.
