1 Lyric Poetry and the New Criticism

The question "What is lyric poetry?" has never been adequately answered. Few studies focus on this question exclusively, and the question is rarely confronted fully. The scholarly lore that surrounds the lyric has been determined more by practical occasion than by theoretical attention. Comment on the lyric has been mainly descriptive, with few explanatory principles offered to motivate these descriptions. In his inaugural address to the Toronto symposium on the lyric in 1982, Northrop Frye proclaimed, "It is high time for critical theory to come to firmer grips with the lyrical element in literature" (Hosek and Parker, eds. 37). Indeed it is "high time."<1>

Theoretical concern for the lyric is strongly associated with the New Criticism, but the New Criticism never substantially advanced our theoretical understanding of the lyric. For the most part, the poet-critics who were leaders of the New Criticism (Eliot, Ransom, Brooks, Richards, Empson, etc.) left us no detailed studies of the basic elements of lyric expression (visual form, sound, intonation, syntax, rhetorical tropes and schemes, versification, rhythm, etc.), much less of their complex interrelations. Companion Spider Clayton Eshleman, 2010-03-01 Companion Spider is the accumulated work of a poet and translator who goes more deeply into the art and its process and demands than anyone since Robert Duncan Clayton Eshleman is one of our most admired and controversial poets the translator of such great international poets as César Vallejo, Aimé Césaire and Antonin Artaud and founder and editor of two important literary magazines Sulfur and Caterpillar. As such, Eshleman writes about the vocation of poet and of the poet as translator as no one else in America today. He believes adamantly that art must concern itself with vision and that poets learn best by an apprenticeship that is a kind of immersion in the work of other poets. Companion Spider opens with a unique eighty-page essay called Novices: A Study of Poetic Apprenticeship addressed to the poet who is just starting out. Subsequent sections take up the art of translation, poets and their work, and literary magazine editing. The title is drawn from an extraordinary visionary experience which the author had which becomes a potent metaphor for the creative process. Through the variety of poets and artists to whom he pays homage, Eshleman suggests a community which is not of a single place or time; rather, there is mutual recognition and responsiveness so that the reader becomes aware of a range of artistic practices s/he might explore.
