Communities in Action National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine,Health and Medicine Division,Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice,Committee on Community-Based Solutions to Promote Health Equity in the United States,2017-03-27 In the United States some populations suffer from far greater disparities in health than others Those disparities are caused not only by fundamental differences in health status across segments of the population but also because of inequities in factors that impact health status so called determinants of health Only part of an individual's health status depends on his or her behavior and choice community wide problems like poverty unemployment poor education inadequate housing poor public transportation interpersonal violence and decaying neighborhoods also contribute to health inequities as well as the historic and ongoing interplay of structures policies and norms that shape lives When these factors are not optimal in a community it does not mean they are intractable such inequities can be mitigated by social policies that can shape health in powerful ways Communities in Action Pathways to Health Equity seeks to delineate the causes of and the solutions to health inequities in the United States This report focuses on what communities can do to promote health equity what actions are needed by the many and varied stakeholders that are part of communities or support them as well as the root causes and structural barriers that need to be overcome Partnerships Between Health and Local Government

Stephanie Snape,Pat Taylor,2004-06-01 The theme of this collection of essays is partnerships between health and local government Such partnerships are not new Nor is discussion of the merits or otherwise of collaboration between the two sectors The history of collaboration between these two sectors of the public services has been chequered to say the least indeed the boundary between health and social care has been described as a Berlin Wall However New Labour's ascension to power in 1997 has rekindled an avid interest in this issue The government's emphasis on partnerships and collaboration has been projected as a key element of its Third Way philosophy Partnership working in particular has been viewed as the most appropriate means of addressing endemic obdurate social ills such as social exclusion poor health poverty and low educational standards

Partnership Working in Public Health Hunter, David J.,Perkins, Neil,2014-01-10 The UK government's reforms of the NHS and public health system require partnerships if they are to succeed Those partnerships concerned with public health are especially important and are deemed to be a good thing which add rather than consume value Yet the significant emphasis on partnership working to secure effective policy and service delivery exists despite the evidence testifying to how difficult it is to make partnerships work or achieve results Partnership working in public health presents the findings from a detailed study of public health partnerships in England The lessons from the research are used to explore the government's changes in public health now being implemented most of which centre on new partnerships called Health and Wellbeing Boards that have been established to work differently from their predecessors The book assesses their likely impact and the implications for the future of public health partnerships Drawing on systems thinking it argues that partnerships can only succeed if they work in quite different ways The book will therefore appeal to the public health community and students of health policy
