Abwesenheit Schutting's Der Vater and Barbara Bronnen's Die Tochter Moffit investigates each daughter's relationship to her father on three separate levels on the personal level within the context of family dynamics on the metaphorical level of gendered socialization in a patriarchal society and on the socio-political level of the father's involvement in National Socialism. Although these daughter memoirs deal with personal family stories, they are considered collective autobiographies that uncover larger cultural patterns in German-speaking countries and thus represent a counterpart to official history.
