

ART LINKLETTER is a longtime television personality. It was a warm June day in 1933. The nation was in the depths of the worst depression in history. I was in the kitchen of the college cafeteria making Waldorf salad, one of three jobs I had while working my way toward a teaching degree with a minor in English at San Diego State. The telephone rang for me and the clatter of the kitchen as I heard a stranger say, "My name is Lincoln Deffer. I am the manager of the CBS station KGB in San Diego. I heard you win a debate on campus last month, and since I've learned you also write a column and that you've just written a musical comedy for the Los Angeles Follies, I am just wondering if you would be interested in being a radio announcer." I quickly said yes, although I had never dreamed of being in show business. I did ask about the hours, the salary, retirement pay, vacations, options or any other topic concerning my possible employment. Remember, this was 1933. The following week I was doing announcements and reading commercials nightly from 1 p.m. to 1 a.m., averaging $75 a month. I had no idea that in the next few years I would be broadcasting on all three networks, my own shows on a nationwide basis.

CHRISTIANE AMANPOUR is chief international correspondent for CNN. In September of 1983, I arrived at CNN headquarters in Atlanta with $115, a bicycle and a suitcase. I felt rather lucky since these were the cheap and cheerful early days of Cable News Network, and I had just been hired on the basis of a telephone interview in which I was asked, among other things, what's the capital of Iran? Since I am Iranian, I got the answer right, and from Day 1 I felt rather good about my future with this network. ALEXANDER WOLFF is a senior writer at Sports Illustrated and has written a half-dozen books. In the late 1970s, I was a freshman at Princeton University, trying to learn the hard way down on my hand! Luckily, his teeth seemed to have been filed down, but the skin was broken and I was rushed off for a tetanus shot. GEORGE VECNEY is a sports columnist on the New York thing about volunteerism, but that had nothing to do with why I took a job at $50 a week to report for KLWV, a public broadcasting station in Las Vegas. Long before I got into sports reporting, I was going to do some hard-hitting journalism. To that end, I found myself on the Las Vegas strip, trying to pull off the definitive piece on prostitution. Trouble was, a lady of the night saw the wireless microphone I was wearing. The woman went on the (verbal) attack against my cameramen and me. We were pretty certain her associates were on the way. We abandoned our tripod and ran. After all, it was 50 bucks and no health insurance.

Bruce Morrow is a news reporter for CNN. He formerly worked for ABC News in London and CBS News in Washington, D.C. I wrote presscasts for a local radio station in college, but my first real news job was as a flunky for a New York station. The big story one day was that a major mob figure had been shot dead while in a barber shop at a downtown hotel. I was on the Manhattan West Police Station where I watched throngs of clothes detectives, suspects, file in and out. All were new to me. I finally asked a print man how you could tell the cops from the cops. He answered, "The cops are the ones who broadcast." Live and learn.

Harvin Kalb was chief diplomatic correspondent for CBS News and NBC News and moderator for "Meet the Press." He is executive director of the Washington office of the Joan Shorenstein Center on the Press, Politics and Public Policy. I had been hired by CBS News in June of 1957. I had just returned from a year or so in Moscow, where I had served as a translator and sometime press attache at the U.S. Embassy. I assumed, as I arrived on
