Passionate Crusader The Life Of Marie Stopes:

The Public Lives of Charlotte and Marie Stopes Stephanie Green, 2015-10-06 Charlotte Stopes was the first woman in Scotland to get a university qualification. She devoted her life to studying Shakespeare and the promotion of women in public life. Though Charlotte is largely forgotten, her daughter Marie is well known. Green asserts that Marie's success can only be understood in relation to the achievements of her mother.

Passionate Crusader Ruth E. Hall, 1977 In 1935 a panel of American academics compiled a list of the world's most influential modern books and among the names of well-known authors Marx, Lenin, Einstein, Freud was one less well remembered. Dr Marie C. Stopes, who was Marie Stopes, at a time when public discussion of sexual matters was tantamount to an admission of private depravity, Marie Stopes, a paleobotanist by training, wrote Married Love, published in 1918, a sexual manifesto that scandalized and awakened twentieth-century consciousness with its precise physiological descriptions and its unblushing declaration of married women's rights to full sexual enjoyment. At a time when the guardians of public morality decreed that sex was something women should stoically bear in ignorance, Marie Stopes decreed that the one thing women should not have to bear was unwanted children, and Marie Stopes devoted her life to lecturing, instructing women and their husbands, establishing birth control clinics, attacking the religious, social, and political institutions that denied women's rights, and winning the support of liberal thinkers and spokesmen among whom were George Bernard Shaw, H. G. Wells, and Arnold Bennett. In contrast to her coolly brilliant scientific writings and the relentless logic displayed in her books about sex and marriage, Marie Stopes was driven in her middle years to express publicly her own personal and sexual disappointments in excessively romantic, sometimes erotic verse and autobiographical plays. Marie Stopes, despite all her scientific knowledge, was a sexual innocent until her mid-thirties. This ignorance, coupled with her obsession with ideal love, resulted in a first marriage that remained unconsummated after five years. Marie Stopes, an extraordinary woman, an eccentric woman, a contradictory woman, a twentieth-century Joan of Arc, a woman who transformed her own personal struggles into a movement that came to be known as a revolution just a decade after her death in 1958. Passionate Crusader is an intimate, inspired biography written with grace and wit as readable as any novel. Readers will come to know the fascinating story of Marie Stopes as well as they know the lives of Anna Karenina, Emma Bovary, or Ibsen's Nora.

Eugenics Richard Lynn, 2001-06-30 Lynn argues that the condemnation of eugenics in the second half of the 20th century went too far and offers a reassessment The eugenic objectives of eliminating genetic diseases increasing intelligence and reducing personality disorders he argues remain desirable and are achievable by human biotechnology In this four part analysis Lynn begins with an account of the foundation of eugenics by Francis Galton and the rise and fall of eugenics in the twentieth century He then sets out historical formulations on this issue and discusses in detail desirability of the new eugenics of human biotechnology After examining the classic approach of attempting to implement eugenics by altering reproduction Lynn concludes that the policies of classical eugenics are not politically feasible in democratic societies The new eugenics of human biotechnology prenatal diagnosis of embryos with genetic diseases embryo selection and cloning may be more likely than classic eugenics to evolve spontaneously in western democracies Lynn looks at the ethical issues of human biotechnologies and how they may be used by authoritarian states to promote state power He predicts how eugenic policies and dysgenic processes are likely to affect geopolitics and the balance of power in the 21st century Lynn offers a provocative analysis that will be of particular interest to psychologists sociologists demographers and biologists concerned with issues of population change and intelligence

India while illuminating its connection to contemporary debates in India and birth control movements in Great Britain and the United States Sanjam Ahluwalia draws attention to the interactive and relational history of Indian birth control by including western activists such as Margaret Sanger and Marie Stopes alongside important Indian campaigners In revealing the elitist politics of middle class feminists Indian nationalists western activists colonial authorities and the medical establishment Ahluwalia finds that they all sought to rationalize procreation and regulate women while invoking competing notions of freedom femininity and family Ahluwalia's remarkable interviews with practicing midwives in rural northern India fills a gaping void in the documentary history of birth control and shows that the movement has had little appeal to non elite groups in India Finding that Jaunpuri women's reproductive decisions are bound to their emotional cultural and economic reliance on family and community Ahluwalia presents the limitations of universal liberal feminist categories which often do not consider differences among localized subjects She argues that elitist birth control efforts failed to account for Indian women's values and needs and have worked to restrict reproductive rights rather than liberate subaltern Indian women since colonial times Sibyl-child, 1978 The Manuscript Inventories and the Catalogs of Manuscripts, Books, and Periodicals: Book catalog, Mae-Pin Arthur and Elizabeth Schlesinger Library on the History of Women in America, 1984
