extremes that are virtually absent today would cover nearly 60-70 percent of total land area in northern hemisphere summer adversely impacting ecosystems Under 4°C warming rural populations would face mounting pressures from sea level rise increased tropical cyclone intensity storm surges saltwater intrusions and loss of marine ecosystem services In South Asia the potential sudden onset of disturbances to the monsoon system and rising peak temperatures would put water and food resources at severe risk Well before 2°C warming occurs substantial reductions in the frequency of low snow years is projected to cause substantial reductions in dry season flow threatening agriculture Many of the worst climate impacts could still be avoided by holding warming below 2°C but the window for action is closing rapidly Urgent action is also needed to build resilience to a rapidly warming world that will pose significant risks to agriculture water resources coastal infrastructure and human health

IPCC Special Report on the Regional Impacts of Climate Change R. T. Watson, 2000 Protecting Health from Climate Change Kristie L. Ebi, World Health Organization, 2014-03-31 There is now strong evidence that the earth s climate is changing rapidly due mainly to human activities Increasing temperatures sea level rises changes in precipitation patterns and extreme events are expected to increase a range of health risks from the direct effects of heat waves floods and storms to more suitable conditions for the transmission of important infectious diseases to impacts on the natural systems and socioeconomic sectors that ultimately underpin human health Much of the potential health impact of climate change can however be avoided through a combination of strengthening key health system functions and improved management of the risks presented by a changing climate The critical first step in this process is to carry out a vulnerability and adaptation assessment This allows countries to assess which populations are most vulnerable to different kinds of health effects to identify weaknesses in the systems that should protect them and to specify interventions to respond Assessments can also improve evidence and understanding of the linkages between climate and health within the assessment area serve as a baseline analysis against which changes in disease risk and protective measures can be monitored provide the opportunity for building capacity and strengthen the case for investment in health protection WHO has responded to this global demand by building on past guidance and technical tools to outline a flexible process for vulnerability and adaptation assessment In 2009 the WHO Regional Office for the Americas and WHO prepared draft guidance for this process which was pilot tested in studies across all WHO Regions In July 2010 representatives of ministries of health from 15 countries came together in Costa Rica with WHO and subject area experts to share their experiences and provide feedback on how to improve the guidance for the conduct of vulnerability assessments This document is the result of this process It is intended not as a final definitive guide but as an important part of an evolving set of resources that will support effective and evidence based action to protect health from climate change
