The Housing Question Frederick Engels,2021-05-16 In the early 1870s an ideological debate began to unfold in the German press on the shortage of affordable housing available to workers in major industrial areas The rapid increase in industrial production necessitating an increase in industrial workers created a housing crisis From June 1872 to February 1873 Fredrick Engels contributed a series of articles to the publication The Volksstaat The People s State titled The Housing Question Originally published as a booklet by the Co Operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the USSR and out of print for many years INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS is proud to make this text available as workers yet again face almost insurmountable obstacles to finding affordable housing As Engels wrote in 1872 What is meant today by housing shortage is the peculiar intensification of the bad housing conditions of the workers as the result of the sudden rush of population to the big towns a colossal increase in rents a still further aggravation of overcrowding in the individual houses and for some the impossibility of finding a place to live in at all Fredrick Engels essays collected here as The Housing Question are just as relevant today roughly 150 years after first written

A Voice of Reform Tatiana I. Zaslavskaja, Murray Yanowitch, A. Schultz, 2016-07-22 First Published in 1989 It has become common both in Soviet and in Western writings about the USSR to characterize the early 1980s the immediate pre Gorbachev period as years of stagnation or at the very least near stagnation in the Soviet system Since the sudden outburst of reformist thinking since 1985 it is clear there is actually an elaboration and reinforcement of concepts and ideas that had already begun to emerge in the pre Gorbachev years The writings of Tatiana I Zaslavskaja trained as an economist and today one of the most influential and best known Soviet sociologists provide an illustration of this proposition

Planning in Eastern Europe (Routledge Revivals) Andrew H. Housing Policy David Vernon Donnison, Clare Ungerson, 1982

The Housing Problem in the Soviet Union Timothy Sosnovy, 1954

Socialist Entrepreneurs Iván Szelényi, 1988 Among the East European nations Hungary has been noted in recent years for permitting even encouraging family entrepreneurship in agriculture In this highly empirical study Ivan Szelényi and his collaborators explore this phenomenon affording a rare view of the reemergence of private sector activity in a socialist society and offering new insights into the very origins of capitalism In the years since the government relaxed its policy of forced collectivization approximately ten percent of rural Hungarian families have taken up entrepreneurial opportunities in agriculture Why they have chosen this course and why ninety percent of family have chosen to remain in proletarian or cadre positions are central questions in Szelényi's inquiry The theory advocated here is one of interrupted embourgeoisement Those people who during the years of Stalinism found occupations in which they could successfully resist the dual pressures of proletarianization and cadreification are the ones now able to reenter the interrupted embourgeoisement trajectory As a result the communist revolution from above has been challenged by a somewhat unexpected revolution from below in the process producing a socialist mixed economic system that seems to be as different from Soviet style communism as it is from Western capitalism This is a very very important work combining rich primary research by Szelenyi and four colleagues with a major step toward a theory of articulation of a state socialist mixed economy Using surveys from 1972 73 and 1982 84 the authors traced life histories to identify variables that showed why families responded differently to proletarianization formation of a new working class or embourgeoisement World Development
