

REGIONAL ACTORS AND SECURITY SECTOR GOVERNANCE

AIM

This chapter examines security sector reform from a regional perspective. It starts by providing the context of regionalism in Africa as a background. Section 10.1 explains how democratic governance in the security sector fits within regional security arrangements in Africa. Section 10.2 discusses harmonisation and monitoring of Security Sector Governance within regional security arrangements. Section 10.3 discusses examples of African regional initiatives where security sector governance is beginning to show some promise and relevance. Section 10.4 discusses the role of "regional hegemony" in the incorporation of security sector reform into the regional agenda.

The context of regionalism in Africa

(FO: I HAVE ADDED THIS SECTION – LET ME KNOW WHAT YOU THINK)

Whilst regionalism is not new in Africa, a number of factors seem to have promoted the virtues of regionalism amongst African leaders and peoples in the late 1980s and early 1990s. The peculiar context of the 1990s definitely redefined the nature of both politics and conflict. Triggered by both external and internal factors, the crisis of hegemony and legitimacy of the average African state found refuge in the attempt to seek a common response to the problems at home. These factors include:

- Shifts in global and geo-political power relations, in particular the end of the cold war and the retraction of the imperial security umbrella, which allowed former client regimes to be challenged in ways unimaginable in the past;
- The retreat of the superpowers placed greater prominence on the role of and competition between regional powers in conflict and conflict management;
- Conflict parties (both governments and rebel groups) previously supported by superpowers had to turn to new sources of funding, including the exploitation of natural resources and criminal activity (drugs, etc) making them potentially less amenable to external pressure;
- New particularistic forms of political consciousness and identity, often structured around religion and ethnicity, replaced the extant "universalistic" debates between "capitalism" and "socialism" that had underpinned the Cold War, reinforcing the erosion of a sense of common citizenship fostered by state contraction and popular disillusionment with politics;
