Regional Economic Development Robert J. Stimson, Roger R. Stough, Brian H. Roberts, 2013-03-09. Regional economic development has attracted the interest of economists, geographers, planners and regional scientists for a long time. And of course it is a field that has developed a large practitioner cohort in government and business agencies from the national down to the state and local levels. In planning for cities and regions, both large and small, economic development issues now tend to be integrated into strategic planning processes. For at least the last 50 years, scholars from various disciplines have theorised about the nature of regional economic development, developing a range of models seeking to explain the process of regional economic development and why it is that regions vary so much in their economic structure and performance, and how these aspects of a region can change dramatically over time. Regional scientists, in particular, have developed a comprehensive tool kit of methodologies to measure and monitor regional economic characteristics such as industry sectors, employment, income, value of production, investment and the like, using both quantitative and qualitative methods of analysis and focusing on both static and dynamic analysis. The father of regional science, Walter Isard, was the first to put together a comprehensive volume on techniques of regional analysis (Isard, 1960) and since then a huge literature has emerged, including the many titles in the series published by Springer in which this book is published.
