

Maya Angelou

(April 4, 1928 – May 28, 2014)

Maya Angelou was a poet, author, dancer, singer, composer, director, teacher, actress, and civil rights activist. She wrote seven autobiographies, several books of poetry and essays, and wrote for television, theater, and movies. Angelou was a powerful voice for the African-American community.

She was born Marguerite Annie Johnson on April 4, 1928, in St. Louis, Missouri to Bailey and Vivian Johnson. She was nicknamed Maya by her older brother, Bailey Jr. Her parents divorced when she was three years old and her father sent her and Bailey Jr. to live with their paternal grandmother, Annie Henderson, in Arkansas. Henderson owned a prosperous general store, which put her in a better financial situation than most Southern African-Americans of the time.

At age seven, Angelou's father returned her and Bailey Jr. to their mother's care in St. Louis. A year later, Angelou suffered a traumatic incident that caused her to stop speaking. She remained mute for almost five years. During that time, she learned to listen and observe deeply. She also grew to love literature. She and Bailey Jr. were moved back to their grandmother's home after the incident, but were returned to their mother, who had moved to California, when Angelou was fourteen. Angelou became the first African-American female cable car operator in San Francisco when she was only sixteen years old. One year later, she completed her schooling, and soon after gave birth to her son, Clyde.

In the early 1950's, Angelou studied modern and African dance. From 1951 to 1954, she was married to Tosh Angelos, a Greek electrician and musician. After her marriage ended, she began to dance professionally at nightclubs and changed her stage name to Maya Angelou. Her success led to a part in a production of Porgy and Bess that toured Europe for two years. Soon after, she recorded an album of calypso music.

Angelou moved to New York in 1959 to focus on writing. She joined the Harlem Writers Guild, where she met many influential authors. She performed in a production of The Blacks. She organized fundraisers for the civil rights movement after meeting Martin Luther King Jr. and hearing his speeches. From 1961 to 1965, Angelou lived in Africa
