

The background of the cover is a detailed illustration of a kitchen or herb garden. In the foreground, a wooden table holds several items: a large glass jar, a smaller ceramic jar, and some loose herbs. Behind the table, there are several potted plants, including leafy greens and herbs in terracotta and wooden pots. The scene is set indoors, with a window in the background showing more greenery outside. The overall style is that of a classic oil painting, with soft lighting and a warm color palette.

Muslims Unearthing the connections among these developments and many others Julia Hauser explores the global history of vegetarianism from the mid nineteenth century to the early Cold War She traces personal networks and exchanges of knowledge spanning Europe the United States and South Asia highlighting mutual influence as well as the disconnects of cross cultural encounters Hauser argues that vegetarianism in this period was motivated by expansive visions of moral physical and even racial purification Adherents were convinced that society could be changed by transforming the body of the individual Hauser demonstrates that vegetarians in India and the West shared notions of purity which drew some toward not only internationalism and anticolonialism but also racism nationalism and violence Finding preoccupations with race and masculinity as well as links to colonialism and eugenics she reveals the implication of vegetarian movements in exclusionary hierarchical projects Deeply researched and compellingly argued A Taste for Purity rewrites the history of vegetarianism on a global scale
