Finding Quiet Strength Judith Kleinman, 2022-05 Finding Quiet Strength FQS is a practical philosophy that connects to both ancient wisdom and modern neuroscience At some point most of us need help with the challenges of life FQS is a practice of being present in a way that develops our emotional intelligence and embodied awareness enabling us to navigate the many ups and downs of being human The work helps us to develop a deep and gentle self acceptance A core element of this work is inspired by F M Alexander s principles of inhibition and direction stopping thinking and connecting With practice we can take a moment to pause and consider how we might be limiting ourselves and begin to notice the interconnection of our mindset with our bodies Often the patterns of worrying and anxiety that we embody can be below our conscious radar and can start to limit the joy peace and ease which we find when we feel in charge of ourselves Finding Quiet Strength integrates Alexander s discoveries with Chi Kung and Tai Chi These ancient traditions help us recognize the signals of threat that trigger old patterns of defense and fear and restore us to a sense of being centered and to regain conscious control FQS works on the relationship between thinking in stillness and thinking in activity to find a sense of wholeness in whatever we do so we can feel at home with ourselves in all situations and our lives can become more joyful Key Points Finding Quiet Strength practices develop Understanding of the interconnectedness of the mind body and emotions Sensory awareness with an emphasis on an appreciation of the somatic sense of the body in stillness and movement A reliable map of the structure of the body Through an exploration of balance the connection between breathing embodiment and the environment An understanding of how to listen to our nervous systems to recognize the signals of threat and safety The understanding the signals of threat and safety learn to cue in the safety response to self regulate A deep understanding of what it is to think clearly breathe well and move easily Being able to be present with what we are doing while we are doing it
