THE QUEST FOR AFRICA

by HEINRICH SCHIFFERS

From the book

"To wonder that men looked to the continent to the far south from which man's earliest steps began there found little wealth in land and water—rivers, marsh plains, grass, slaves. It was there, surely, the very essence of such thoughts were to be found. It was Europe there, more than ten thousand miles away, who depicted her own world in the first actual voyage of discovery."

"In 1519, 1549 Robb, with a little group of natives, stood at the foot of the great mountains, which was covered with a remarkably white top. But this was no natural peak, rather it was from a high mountain, towering in jagged rocks above forests and bare plains the mountains of the eternal snows, and this was not far from the Equator. It was Mount Kilimanjaro. . . . Years later . . . the English geographer William Collins, made his assertion that it was nothing but a very high hill."

"In the end of July 1482, Spica reached Lake Tanganyika which measured 100 miles square and is about twice the size of Belgium. He named it Lake Victoria in honor of the Queen. Here too the native people confirmed his opinion that he had thereby discovered the source of the White Nile. So true that he himself did not see the mouth of the river."

"The journey of the land was marvellous. The rebel soldiers of the Sultan, except the Government to abandon their territories. Can anyone be so stupid to send you any help? What was the Governor's plan to do now? Should he fight, taking his establishment with him? That meant he would risk his life and the lives of his men and children. . . . The emergency situation was real and yet that proved to be the end of all communication with the world. He was still, according to Henry Esquivel."
