Struggle of Mauritania's Haratine Women Paige Wilhite Jennings,2015-05-04 Mauritania is consistently ranked as the worst place in the world for slavery with tens of thousands still trapped in total servitude across the country This practice despite officially being criminalized continues to be sustained by the systematic marginalization of Mauritania s large Haratine population The situation is especially precarious for Haratine women who are discriminated against on account of both their gender and ethnicity This report Still Far From Freedom The Struggle of Mauritania s Haratine Women draws on extensive research and first hand testimony from Haratine women Besides highlighting the everyday reality of abuse and oppression experienced by those in servitude ranging from exploitative labour intimidation and confinement to rape violence and the enforced separation of families it also explores how formerly enslaved Haratines and their descendants still face widespread stigmatization The deep discrimination experienced by Haratine women even among their own community is driven by the reluctance of authorities to take meaningful action to curb abuses Nevertheless although these obstacles can be overwhelming many Haratine women have demonstrated great courage and determination in their fight for equality and greater autonomy in their own lives Despite the dangers and the deep resistance their activities attract including from male members of their own community Haratine women have played a leading role in advocating for their rights and legal redress for the abuses committed against them Nevertheless though the immediate abolition of slavery in Mauritania is a critical first step in reducing many of the worst rights abuses against Haratine women a wider process of social and institutional reform will also be required before their rights and security can be ensured These issues can only be addressed by a comprehensive and sustained process of social and institutional reform with the involvement of the national government Mauritanian civil society law enforcement agencies and the international community

Landmark ruling on Mauritania's continued failure to eradicate child slavery Emelie Kozak, 2018-07-11 Despite being banned by law slavery and slavery like practices remain widespread in Mauritania with thousands of men women and children most of whom belong to the marginalized Haratine ethnic group still trapped in servitude To a large extent impunity for these crimes has been enabled by the failure of authorities to take action against the perpetrators leaving victims unprotected and with little or no access to justice To address this Minority Rights Group International MRG in partnership with Mauritanian NGO SOS Esclaves and Anti Slavery International has for years been working to secure recognition of these rights violations and ensure authorities take concrete measures to implement anti slavery legislation including adequate investigation and prosecution of those responsible While there have been some positive steps in recent years including the passing in 2007 of the country's first anti slavery legislation implementation and enforcement of its provisions have been almost non existent In November 2011 in the first prosecution under the 2007 Anti Slavery Law Ahmed Ould El Hassine was found guilty of holding two brothers Said and Yarg Ould Salem in slavery and depriving them of schooling Despite this apparent milestone however the sentences imposed were well below the minimum terms stipulated by the law and the slave master was subsequently released on bail just four months after his conviction In response MRG and SOS Esclaves brought a case before the African Committee of Experts on the Rights and Welfare of the Child In December 2017 the Committee ruled that Mauritania had failed to take adequate measures to prevent prosecute and remedy slavery and found multiple violations of its obligations to protect children's rights under the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child The background and implications of this groundbreaking ruling are discussed in detail in this briefing In light of a subsequent decision by the Mauritanian Supreme Court in April 2018 in relation to the case of Said and Yarg which apparently failed to consider the Committee's ruling it is more important than ever to raise awareness about the proper application of anti slavery laws in Mauritania for the benefit of other slavery victims
