ABSTRACT

The study is qualitative and it drew on the historical research method, descriptive and case study methods to examine the link between learning, art, and the creative nature of children. Its aim is to transmit the value of art in enhancing creativity through aesthetics in children and consequently enhance their learning. Thus, the study through the use of document analysis (analyzing the art works of the children), what the children had to say about their works, interviews and the observation tools throws light on how effective learning could be when taken in the context of art to boost creativity in children; and also enable the teacher to identify some activities that could or should be incorporated in the teaching of children. Since creativity is increasingly gaining recognition as a human characteristic that can be (and should be) developed through education, there is the need to make conscious efforts to develop children's creativity and learning through art education. This way, teachers do not necessarily produce children who would by all means become artists but rather creative children who can transfer the skills they have learnt through art to other subject areas and in effect to all other facets of their lives.

INTRODUCTION

Art and music are familiar examples of creativity, but creative thought emerges in almost all facets of life — from the way a parent soothes a crying child to the methods a scientist uses to discover a cure for a disease (DeBord, 1997). There has been much research into the link between the expressive arts (art, music, dance, and dramatics) and creativity; but this is not to deny the role of creativity in other areas such as Science, Mathematics and Business.

A look at today's schools, reveal that they are concerned (as they rightly should be) with teaching literacy. However, literacy must not be limited to the written word. It should also embrace the symbol systems of the arts. If the concept of literacy is defined too narrowly as referring to just the systems of language, mathematics and sci-
