So great and so successful has been the industry recently applied to subjects of arch ological research that few of the many problems in that science which fifty years ago seemed hopelessly mysterious now remain unsolved Little more than forty years have elapsed since Champollion s discoveries enabled us to classify and understand the wonderful monuments of the Nile Valley The deciphering of the cuneiform characters has in like manner enabled us to arrange and affix dates to the temples and palaces of Babylon and Nineveh Everything that was built by the Greeks and the Romans has been surveyed and illustrated and all the medi val styles that arose out of them have been reduced to intelligible sequences The rock cut temples of India and her still more mysterious dagobas have been brought within the domain of history and like those of Burmah Cambodia or China shown to be of comparatively modern date The monuments of Mexico and Peru may be said still to defy those who are endeavouring to wrest their secrets from them but even for these a fairly approximate date has been obtained But amidst all these triumphs of well directed research there still remains a great group of monuments at our own doors regarding whose uses or dates opinions are nearly as much divided as they were in the days of rampant empiricism in the last century It is true that men of science do not now pretend to see Druids sacrificing their bleeding victims on the altar at Stonehenge nor to be able to trace the folds of the divine serpent through miles of upright stones at Carnac or at Avebury but all they have yet achieved is simple unbelief in the popular fallacies nor have they hitherto ventured to supply anything better to take their places They still call the circles temples but without being able to suggest to what god they were dedicated or for what rites they were appropriate and when asked as to the age in which they were erected can only reply in the words of the song that it was long long ago This state of affairs is eminently unsatisfactory but at the same time to a great extent excusable Indeed it is not at first sight easy to see how it is to be remedied The builders of the megalithic remains were utterly illiterate and have left no written records of their erection nor are there any legible inscriptions on the more important monuments which would afford any hints to the enquirer What is even more disheartening is that in almost every instance they are composed of rough unhewn stones not only without any chisel marks but even without any architectural mouldings capable of being compared with those of other monuments or by their state of preservation of giving a hint as to their relative age     Rude Stone Monuments in All Countries James Fergusson (Architecte),1872     Rude Stone Monuments in All Countries James Fergusson,2015-09-02 This work has been selected by scholars as being culturally

Rude Stone Monuments in All Countries James Fergusson, 2015-08-05 Excerpt from Rude Stone Monuments in All Countries Their Age and Uses When in the year 1854 I was arranging the scheme for the Handbook of Architecture one chapter of about fifty pages was allotted to the Rude Stone Monuments then known When however I came seriously to consult the authorities I had marked out and to arrange my ideas preparatory to writing it I found the whole subject in such a state of confusion and uncertainty as to be wholly unsuited for introduction into a work the main object of which was to give a clear but succinct account of what was known and admitted with regard to the architectural styles of the world Again ten years afterwards while engaged in re writing this Handbook as a History of Architecture the same difficulties presented themselves It is true that in the interval the Druids Avith their Dracontia had lost much of the hold they possessed on the mind of the public but to a great extent they had been replaced by prehistoric myths which though free from their absurdity were hardly less perplexing The consequence was that then as in the first instance it would have been necessary to argue every point and defend every position Nothing could be taken for granted and no narrative was possible The matter was therefore a second time allowed quietly to drop without being noticed About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
