published every thirty seconds and optimistically points out that publishers who moan about low sales see as a failure what is actually a blessing The book business unlike newspapers films or television is viable on a small scale Zaid who claims to own more than ten thousand books says he has sometimes thought that a chastity glove for authors who can't contain themselves would be a good idea Nonetheless he cheerfully opines that the truly cultured are capable of owning thousands of unread books without losing their composure or their desire for more New Yorker
