Shearsman ,2001 Run Through Rock Besmilr Brigham,2000 Poetry Selected and edited by C D Wright RUN THROUGH ROCK is a humble yet unparalleled contribution to 20th century American poetry a recuperative selection of a radically eccentric poet s work Selected edited and reverently framed by poet C D Wright Besmilr Brigham s voice is here

codified in its own volume for the first time since 1972 a voice autochthonous primally so Wright notes in her Preface Thus an American poet was heaved from the earth and occupied her numbered days shaping a rock hard sensibility of extreme independence Brigham's poems transcend multiple spheres of cultural economic ecological and literary borders She lived nearly three decades out of a station wagon with her husband and daughter driving through camping and living in America America to me is from certainly the edge of the Arctic circle all the way down to the well whatever it is Patagonia to the tip of Chile jutting out into the sea An old old world before anything like the US came upon or into it It is the great land mass Brigham in a letter This poet was a woman from the deep and rural South a poet of the natural world not in the pastoral sense but in the habitual sense The writing is odd both on the surface and below it never quite yields its oddness however commonplace the subject Punctuation is eccentric but deliberate her poems are her five senses Living and dying are the time honored themes but very much in the act of rather the process of and always with unaverted eyes from the Preface by C D Wright describes an America where children who reach adolescence choose the madman who will accompany them into adulthood in Godzilla versus the Smog Monster a teenager is flustered by his older wilder neighbor while California burns on the other
