

How to inspire a love of learning in your kids.

Make lessons fun

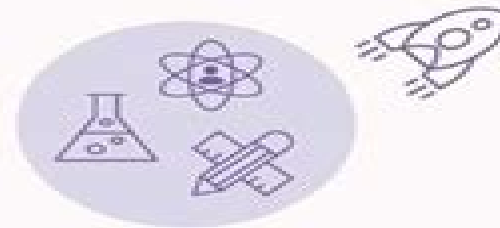

Most people don't like being lectured to for long periods of time, especially children. If you try to make every single lesson as fun as possible for your kids, they will be more engaged, more likely to absorb what you're teaching them, and become more fond of learning.

Chat with them more

Children are naturally curious, and you can stoke this inquisitiveness by simply having more conversations with them. They can really help to brighten their curiosity, and even spark fully-fledged fascinations with aspects of the world.

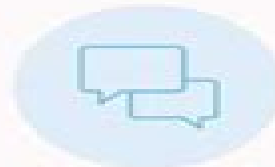

Go slowly with anxious children

Anxiety can be a significant barrier to learning for children – it's hard to focus when you're in a constant state of alert. Try strategies like mindfulness, lots of assurance, and feelings boards to help.

Provide a variety of experiences

Try to provide your kids with as many experiences as possible, both creative and exploratory. Sculpting, piano, treasure hunts, the library, zoos, origami, horse riding, crazy golf – the possibilities are endless.

Strengthen their pillars of health

Learning takes energy and sustained focus, which are strengthened if your child's pillars of health are properly tended to. These include sufficient sleep, good nutrition, and enough exercise.
