Excerpt from The Story of Louis XVII of France My sole object in writing The Story of Louis XVII is to make a useful contribution to authentic history I firmly believe that Eleazer Williams was the Dauphin and to establish this fact is to explain many historical mysteries and also to clear the character of an honest man who suffered greatly during his life and died under a cloud as an impostor I never saw Eleazer Williams nor any of his descendants I am a member of the Williams family and Eleazer as a supposed relative often visited at my grandfather's house and was intimate with two of my uncles But that was before my day and I never heard of the man until the publication of the article Have we a Bourbon among us in 1853 I happened then to be with one of the uncles alluded to and on reading the statement he exclaimed Now I understand That explains it Afterwards he told me that when they were both young Eleazer used to tell him about wonderful visions of beautiful scenes and splendidly dressed people which haunted him and which seemed to be fleeting reminiscences of what had really happened in his childhood About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and
