Garden delights in the ingenuity and variety of the sexual tactics of insects and flowers The bee orchid for instance attracts male bees by duplicating the scent emitted by female bees during mating season A gullible male arrives and searches excitedly for the non-existent female opening Then a second male arrives mistakes the first male for a female and as they wrestle and wiggle furiously the bee orchid is pollinated In the realm of insects sex is often accompanied with violence and in some cases even cannibalism Take the notorious female praying mantis in the midst of the sexual act she beheads her enraptured male partner who carries on though headless while she devours him bite by bite Love in the Garden does not aim to enrich the scientific knowledge of its reader Instead it hopes to involve the reader through sexuality and all forms of sensation in the turbulence of life
