

An illustration of a man and a woman in a close embrace. The man, on the left, has short brown hair and is wearing a green sweater over a white collared shirt. He is looking down at the woman with a gentle expression. The woman, on the right, has long dark hair and is wearing a yellow top. She has her eyes closed and a peaceful expression, leaning her head against the man. The background is a plain, light gray. Overlaid on the center of the image is the text 'MODERNISM IN LITERATURE' in a bold, black, sans-serif font, arranged in three lines.

Realism and the Birth of the Modern United States Stanley Corkin, 1996 This book offers an interdisciplinary view of American culture in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries Using the conventions of historical study Stanley Corkin draws out the ways in which the works of writers and filmmakers from 1885 to 1925 shaped and were shaped by the business politics and social life of the period Corkin traces the entrance of the United States into the modern age by considering the historical dimension of cinema and literary aesthetics first of realism then naturalism and finally modernism He begins with the work of writer William Dean Howells and the advent of American cinema under the stewardship of Thomas Edison arguing that realism was complexly involved in Progressive political and economic reform Next analyses of Theodore Dreiser's novel Sister Carrie and the films of the Edison Company's star director Edwin S Porter detail the relationships of naturalism to the increasingly abstract presentation of the material commodity through mass marketing The study culminates with an examination of the parallels between Ernest Hemingway's In Our Time and the D W Griffith film The Birth of a Nation These two modernist works Corkin contends illustrate strategies of expression that attempt to move the material commodity away from its economic base and into a pristine apolitical realm These literary and cinematic works both reflect and participate in the economic political and social reorganization of American life from the top down The result Corkin concludes is a world in which a conception of a human being is asserted as differing little from that of a machine a tree or an animal

Realism After Modernism Devin Fore, 2012 The human figure made a spectacular return in visual art and literature in the 1920s Following modernism's withdrawal nonobjective painting gave way to realistic depictions of the body and experimental literary techniques were abandoned for novels with powerfully individuated characters But the celebrated return of the human in the interwar years was not as straightforward as it may seem In Realism after Modernism Devin Fore challenges the widely accepted view that this period represented a return to traditional realist representation and its humanist postulates. Interwar realism, he argues, did not reinstate its nineteenth-century predecessor but invoked realism as a strategy of mimicry that anticipates postmodernist pastiche. Through close readings of a series of works by German artists and writers of the period, Fore investigates five artistic devices that were central to interwar realism. He analyzes Bauhaus polymath László Moholy-Nagy's use of linear perspective, three industrial novels riven by the conflict between the temporality of capital and that of labor, Brecht's socialist realist plays which explore new dramaturgical principles for depicting a collective subject, a memoir by Carl Einstein that oscillates between recollection and self-erasure, and the idiom of physiognomy in the photomontages of John Heartfield. Fore's readings reveal that each of these rehumanized works, in fact, calls into question the very categories of the human upon which realist figuration is based. Paradoxically, even as the human seemed to make a triumphal return in the culture of the interwar period, the definition of the human and the integrity of the body were becoming more tenuous than ever before. Interwar realism did not harken back to earlier artistic modes but posited new and unfamiliar syntaxes of aesthetic encounter, revealing the emergence of a human subject quite unlike anything that had come before.

The Lime Twig John Hawkes, 1961 But it would be unfair to the reader to reveal what happens when a gang of professional crooks gets wind of the scheme and moves to muscle in on this bettor's dream of a long odds situation. Worked out with all the meticulous detail, terror and suspense of a nightmare, the tale is on one level comparable to a Graham Greene thriller; on another, it explores a group of people, their relationships, fears and loves. For as Leslie A. Fiedler says in his introduction, John Hawkes makes terror rather than love the center of his work, knowing all the while, of course, that there can be no terror without the hope for love and love's defeat.

Realism, Representation, and the Arts in Nineteenth-Century Literature Alison Byerly, 1997 This book confronts a significant paradox in the development of literary realism: the very novels that present themselves as purveyors and celebrants of direct, ordinary human experience also manifest an obsession with art that threatens to sabotage their Realist claims. Unlike previous studies of the role of visual art or music or theatre in Victorian literature, Realism, Representation, and the Arts in Nineteenth-Century Literature examines the juxtaposition of all of these arts in the works of Charlotte Brontë, William Thackeray, George Eliot, Thomas Hardy, and others. Alison Byerly combines close textual analysis with discussion of relevant ancillary topics to illuminate the place of different arts within nineteenth-century British culture. Her book, which also contains sixteen illustrations, represents an effort to bridge the growing gap between aesthetics and cultural studies.

Beginning Realism Steven Earnshaw, 2013-01-18 Realism is an essential concept in literary studies, yet for a variety of reasons it has not received the attention and clarity it deserves, often being dismissed as too slippery to be of use. This accessible study remedies that failing for students and scholars of English Literature and Literary Theory alike, plainly setting out what realism is, the issues surrounding it, and its role in other major literary modes such as modernism and postmodernism. Beginning Realism gives detailed coverage of the nineteenth century realist novel through its focus on novels by Gaskell Eliot Trollope Dickens Mrs Oliphant Thackeray and Zola As well as discussing the novel the book also includes chapters on the use of realism in drama and poetry and a chapter on the language of realism another aspect often overlooked in analysis of the concept The Boundaries of Realism in World Literature Kornelije Kvas,2019-11-19 This study provides a broad examination of the use of realism in literature In particular the author analyzes the such writers as Thackeray Dostoevsky Tolstoy and Maupassant
