Kent Reilly,James F. Northwestern California Sean O'Neill, 2008 Examines the linguistic relativity principle in relation to the Hupa Yurok and Karuk Indians Despite centuries of intertribal contact the American Indian peoples of northwestern California have continued to speak a variety of distinct languages At the same time they have come to embrace a common way of life based on salmon fishing and shared religious practices In this thought provoking re examination of the hypothesis of linguistic relativity Sean O'Neill looks closely at the Hupa Yurok and Karuk peoples to explore the striking juxtaposition between linguistic diversity and relative cultural uniformity among their communities O'Neill examines intertribal contact multilingualism storytelling and historical change among the three tribes focusing on the traditional culture of the region as it existed during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries He asks important historical questions at the heart of the linguistic relativity hypothesis Have the languages in fact grown more similar as a result of contact multilingualism and cultural convergence Or have they instead maintained some of their striking grammatical and semantic differences Through comparison of the three languages O'Neill shows that long term contact among the tribes intensified their linguistic differences creating unique Hupa Yurok and Karuk identities If language encapsulates worldview as the principle of linguistic relativity suggests then this region's linguistic diversity is puzzling Analyzing patterns of linguistic accommodation as seen in the semantics of space and time grammatical classification and specialized cultural vocabularies O'Neill resolves the apparent paradox by assessing long term effects of contact
