

PSY102 – introduction to Psychology

CHAPTER 1

What is psychology?

- Psychology: 'scientific study of mind, brain and behaviour'
- Psychologists make inferences about the mind from behaviour
 - science is all about making careful, systematic observations. Analyzing observations, finding some patterns.
 - Mind is referring to our thoughts, memories, our feelings, our attitudes, our preferences.
 - Behaviour is action; moving your body. It could be moving your arms, legs, lips and tongue to speak, etc.

Most important point: psychology differs from other sciences in that the object of study, or at least one of the objects of study, the human mind – is intangible. You can't touch, taste, see people's thoughts and feelings. The only one to access their mind is through behaviour. Psychologists' inferences, make educated guesses about what's going on in their mind based on their behaviour.
→ OBSERVATION

What is psychology?

- Central question in psychology: Why do people do the things they do?
 - why are some people bullies?
 - WHY-questions
 - Hard to answer:
 - Individual differences → No two people are the same.
 - For example: why are some people bullies; this depends per individual.
 - Behaviour is multiply determined → it's not likely that there is one single explanation why people do the things that they do. It's more likely that there are multiple reasons.
 - For example: why are some people bullies → the person is insecure, hard at home, hormonal changes, etc.
- these are complications, but they're not insurmountable. We don't have to give up and decide that this is all hopeless.
→ you can deal with these problems statistically.

Psychology's past and present

Who	What	When
Wundt	First psych lab	1879
Hall	First N.A. psych lab	1883
Baldwin	First Can. Psych lab	1891

→ 150-160 years old

- Philosophers have always speculated about thought and behaviour
- Early psychologists wanted more empirical methods; they wanted to make systematical careful observations and based their theories about (philosophers not)
- Early psychologists interested in insights from other sciences, especially medicine

Localization of the brain = certain parts of the brain seem to be involved in certain behaviours.

- What should psychologists' study?
