Reason And Reform Studies In Social Policy:

Reason & Reform John Blackwell, 1995 Race and the Politics of Welfare Reform Sanford F. Schram, Joe Brian Soss, Richard Carl Fording, 2010-03-10 It is hard to imagine discussing welfare policy without discussing race yet all too often this uncomfortable factor is avoided or simply ignored. Sometimes the relationship between welfare and race is treated as so self-evident as to need no further attention; equally often race in the context of welfare is glossed over lest it raise hard questions about racism in American society as a whole. Either way ducking the issue misrepresents the facts and misleads the public and policy makers alike. Many scholars have addressed specific aspects of this subject but until now there has been no single integrated overview. Race and the Politics of Welfare Reform is designed to fill this need and provide a forum for a range of voices and perspectives that reaffirm the key role race has played and continues to play in our approach to poverty. The essays collected here offer a systematic step-by-step approach to the issue. Part 1 traces the evolution of welfare from the 1930s to the sweeping Clinton era reforms, providing a historical context within which to consider today's attitudes and strategies. Part 2 looks at media representation and public perception, observing for instance that although blacks accounted for only about one-third of America's poor from 1967 to 1992, they featured in nearly two-thirds of news stories on poverty, a bias inevitably reflected in public attitudes. Part 3 discusses public discourse, asking questions like 'Whose voices get heard and why?' and 'What does race mean to different constituencies?' For although old-fashioned racism has been replaced by euphemism, many of the same underlying prejudices still drive welfare debates and indeed are all the more pernicious for being unspoken. Part 4 examines policy choices and implementation, showing how even the best-intentioned reform often simply displaces institutional inequities to the individual level, bias exercised case-by-case but no less discriminatory in effect. Part 5 explores the effects of welfare reform and the implications of transferring policy-making to the states, where local politics and increasing use of referendum balloting introduce new, often unpredictable concerns. Finally, Frances Fox Piven's concluding commentary 'Why Welfare Is Racist' offers a provocative response to the views expressed in the pages that have gone before, intended not as a last word but rather as the opening argument in an ongoing, necessary and newly envisioned national debate. Sanford Schram is Visiting Professor of Social Work and Social Research, Bryn Mawr Graduate School of Social Work and Social Research. Joe Soss teaches in the Department of Government at the Graduate School of Public Affairs, American University, Washington D.C. Richard Fording is Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science, University of Kentucky. Russia and Eurasia at the Crossroads Egor S. Stroeve, Leonid S. Bliakhman, Mikhail I. Krotoev, 2012-12-06 This last century of the second millennium has compressed human history to such an extent that whole ages of engineering, economics, social politics and the humanities have been accommodated in decades or even years. Mankind has matured and applied its cognitive and creative genes to advance science and to internationalise future goals, including the vital goal of sustainable social development. However, having no control over the new pace of history, twentieth century civilisation has faced global cataclysms of a frequency and depth unprecedented and inconceivable in the past millennia Among the recent crises to be resolved in the third millennium is disintegration of the Soviet Union the biggest state and third largest population in the world Regretfully the pace of change in the Soviet Union had been slower than the rates of reform elsewhere Attempts at economic redecorating instead of radical market oriented reforms failed In Soviet society general discontent with the progress of perestroika in the 1980s provoked the child complacency syndrome that is typical of a young mind contemptuous of any adult action it is convinced that things could have been done much better and much quicker With the new millennium approaching the Soviet Union gave way to 15 new states ridden with both inherited and acquired economic political and social maladies It is common knowledge however that childhood epidemics are short lived

Class and Schools Richard Rothstein, 2004 Contemporary public policy assumes that the achievement gap between black and white students could be closed if only schools would do a better job According to Richard Rothstein Closing the gaps between lower class and middle class children requires social and economic reform as well as school improvement Unfortunately the trend is to shift most of the burden to schools as if they alone can eradicate poverty and inequality In this book Rothstein points the way toward social and economic reforms that would give all children a more equal chance to succeed in school This book features a summary of numerous studies linking school achievement to health care quality nutrition childrearing styles housing stability parental economic security and more aA look at erroneous and misleading data that underlie commonplace claims that some schools beat the demographic odds and therefore any school can close the achievement gap if only it adopted proper practices and an analysis of how the over emphasis of standardized tests in federal law obscures the true achievement gap and makes narrowing it more difficult

Power Struggles over the Post-neoliberal Social Security System Reforms in Venezuela and Ecuador Ezequiel Luis Bistoletti,2018-08-25 This book carries out a comparative analysis of the power struggles over the post neoliberal social security reforms in Venezuela and Ecuador The research breaks down why the social security system reform initiated by Hugo Ch vez government in Venezuela has come down since its passing in 2002 whereas the social security system reform initiated by Rafael Correa s government in Ecuador has come along in spite of the obstacles since 2007 All in all the analysis determined that the struggles over the social security system reforms in both countries remarkably corresponded to each other with regard to their structural conditions points of contention and contending actors In contrast the analysis established substantial divergences regarding the ways in which the struggles over both reforms came about due to the divergent development of the struggles for hegemony between government and opposition These divergences finally brought about the indefinite stagnation of the reform in Venezuela and the advancement of subsequent partial reforms aimed at the universalization of social security in Ecuador Administration ,1995 The Impracticality of Practical Research

Thomas Stanley Popkewitz,2020-04-16 There is an alluring desire that research should lead us to find the practical knowledge that enables people to live a good life in a just and equitable society This desire haunted the 19th century emergence of the social sciences as a discipline then became more pronounced in the postwar mobilizations of research Today that desire lives on in the international assessments of national schools and in the structure of professional education both of which influence government modernization of schools and also provide for people s well being American policy thus reflects research in which reforms are verified by scientific empirical evidences about what works in experiments and will work therefore in society The book explores the idea that practical and useful knowledge changes over time and shows how this knowledge has been re visioned in contemporary research on educational reform instructional improvement and professionalization The study of science draws on a range of social and cultural theories and historical studies to understand the politics of science as well as scientific knowledge that is concerned with social and educational change Research hopes to change social conditions to create a better life and to shape people whose conduct embodies these valued characteristics the good citizen parent or worker Yet this hope continually articulates the dangers that threaten this future Thomas Popkewitz explores how the research to correct social wrongs is paradoxically entangled with the inscription of differences that ultimately hamper the efforts to include

Reasoning Rights Liora Lazarus, Christopher McCrudden, Nigel Bowles, 2014-12-01 This book is about judicial reasoning in human rights cases The aim is to explore the question how is it that notionally universal norms are reasoned by courts in such significantly different ways What is the shape of this reasoning which techniques are common across the transnational jurisprudence and which are particular The book comprising contributions by a team of world leading human rights scholars moves beyond simply addressing the institutional questions concerning courts and human rights which often dominate discussions of this kind seeking instead a deeper examination of the similarities and divergence of reasonings by different courts when addressing comparable human rights questions These differences while partly influenced by institutional concerns cannot be attributed to them alone This book explores the diverse and rich underlying spectrum of human rights reasoning as a distinctive and particular form of legal reasoning evident in the case studies across the selected jurisdictions

The

Future of the Welfare State Francis G. Castles, 2004-07-08 Written by one of the world's leading policy researchers this book seeks to assess the threat posed to modern welfare states by globalization and demographic change Using empirical methods and bringing together insights from across the social sciences Castles interrogates a range of theories suggesting that the welfare state is in crisis Systematically using data for 21 advanced OECD nations he distinguishes crisis myths from crisis realities locating in the process likely trajectories of welfare state development in coming decades The findings of this book confront many of the basic assumptions of contemporary scholarship Economic globalization has not led to a race to the bottom Analogous processes within the European Community have not led to a downward harmonization of social spending There is no new politics of the welfare state with the Left still outspending the Right Over the past two decades spending has been increasing and converging across the OECD Rather than being in a state of crisis western welfare states have achieved a steady state The supposed impact of population ageing on social welfare budgets also turns out to be myth with differences in spending actually being a function of the structure of welfare systems not of any demographic imperative The only potentially real threat is of rapidly declining fertility but Castles argues that welfare state spending in the form of family friendly public policy is in fact our best defence against this problem This is a book with significant policy implications It identifies the factors likely to mould welfare state growth and decline in future years and the diverse problems and challenges confronting welfare state policy makers in different families of nations It is a book for those who like assessing evidence before jumping to unwarranted conclusions and a book for those who wish to see the shape of things to come
