The Original Pink Collar Workers Lady Jane Davis,2015-04-03 What is it like for a woman to do a man's work and do it better Then have to work with him day in and day out Or to have to go home to a husband who asks how her day went Does she mention anything about the supervisor who patted her rear end or the inspector who wants to inspect more than her work Moreover she works in a factory so immense that she's never met everyone But she knows someone is trying to destroy what she's building It may just be the person working next to her or the supervisor or inspector or her best friend What is the chance that you are this woman In Pink Collar Workers you may meet a woman who does the same work as you You can just hear yourself saying Tomorrow is payday Another day of trying to please the supervisor ignoring a married man's lusty grin and tolerating that know it all worker But it's a paycheck and anything to get that damned plane built well almost anything

The Original Pink Collar Workers Lady Davis,2015-04-05 What is it like for a woman to do a man's work and do it better That's what the first pink collar workers had to learn when they set down their skillets and aprons to pick up welding torches hammers or rivet guns while the men fought to keep this country free during World War II Then those men came back home and they had to work with them day in and day out But for their daughters and granddaughters the war in the workplace between men and women still goes on over three decades later However now the enemy is vastly different It's an unseen force of lust alcoholism and sex while several of the women need to band together in sisterhood They've been caught up in espionage intrigue and attempted murder and whoever is sabotaging the planes that they're building Could it be the supervisor a former employee or the person they work with everyday During all these great concerns our gals still need to earn a paycheck and do anything to get that damned plane built well almost anything
