

Frayed Pink Ribbon

What can I say when my old friend calls and says she is dying
I try to be supportive but she can hear my silent crying

What can I say when she says the cancers spread
I look at her with love, at the wig upon her head

What can I say when she is so selfless and so strong
She's only a young mother, the way of this is wrong

What can I say when she tells me of her desire
Just to see her children through the horrible teenage mire

What can I say when the cancers at her throat
Pain twisting round it, like the hangman with his rope

What can I say when she shares her fear of leaving
Her husband , her three children in their constant state of grieving

What can I say when she is too ill to speak
She tried to send a message, too late, she is too weak

What will I say at the funeral of my friend
Bright pink ribbons could not help to free you in the end
